Broad street, in front of the Rankin House, on the balcony of which stood Gen. Wiley and the officers of the division, the band struck up "Dixie." The first note was the signal for a rousing cheer, which came from the throats of the 3,500 men in line, as well as the spectators, who fairly thronged the sidewalks. As Color Sergeant Williams passed bearing the national flag another mighty shout went up. Williams is personally known to nearly every person in Columbus. "Hurrah for the flag!" and "Good bye, Williams!" were uttered in the same breath.

The men made a fine showing as they passed down Broad street. At the Union depot and the yards of the Southern road a vast throng assembled to tell the boys good bye.

The officers of the Third Kentucky have been great social favorites, and for the nonce it seemed that society had adjourned in a body to the trains where its various members remained until the last coach pulled out. During the stay of the Kentuckians in Columbus the regiment, as a body, has made more friends than any of the other regiments in the brigade. The regret at parting was mutual. The health of the regiment is good and the men went to Cuba well equipped for foreign service.
